ANNA AKHMATOVA (1889-1966)
SOMEWHERE THERE IS A SIMPLE LIFE...

Somewhere there is a simple life and world,
Transparent, warm, and full of joy...
This evening speaks the neighbor with the girl,
Across the fence where only bees can hear.

While we observe our rites and meetings,
With ceremonies so difficult and bitter,
And when the reckless windy gust,
Breaks off each sentence we begin to utter.

But not for anything would we exchange,
This splendid, granite city of calamity and fame,
Its rivers wide with glistening ice...its sunless, gloomy garden life,
And, barely audible, the Muse's voice.
